Many construction CFO's actually function as Controllers. While that's a vital role, their company needs an Executive committed to Business Analysis, Strategic Planning, Risk Management and maximization of Technology, all of which are vital to sustaining the business. This informative and entertaining presentation will explore how the industry's best CFO's are transcending the Accounting function to help build the value and future of their companies.

The discussion will explore how the best CFO's spend their time, the most important construction metrics and what the CEO should know and probably does not.
